CU at the Library!

The Clemson University Life Sciences Outreach Center will be at the Walhalla Library to lead middle-school students in some neat art projects! The focus will be on how science is used in making art. We will discuss the ideas of solubility, pigments, and chromatography while making artworks that let the participants experience these concepts in action. Participants will even be able to take their masterpieces home! The goal is to provide a fun and informative experience for tweens and teens so that they can use science in the most creative of ways!

The program is free and open to all middle school aged students.

Register for the event via Event Brite at <http://tinyurl.com/mjefbka> or call the Walhalla Library at (864) 638-4133.

This program is offered as a collaboration between the Oconee County Public Library and Clemson University. For more information contact Youth Services Librarian Stacie Powell at spowell@oconeesc.com
